SmithThis book is an account of the actions of Gen. Nathanael Greene during the campaigns in SC. It added to knowledge of the general that I had gained from reading other works about the Carolinas Campaigns in the Revolution. I liked the book because it was readable, informative, and because the author did not conceal her admiration, which I share, for the service of an officer who had had no real formal military training, yet successfully thwarted British efforts to suppress the patriot forces. Ms Moring pays tribute to a patriot who risked a great deal, including his life, to serve the American cause but whose contributions have not always been fully appreciated. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Great book on little known period in American history By Customer Moring writes about little known American hero, Greene, and how he was able to save the southern states at the end of the American Revolution. This book is very interesting and a quick, fun read. Would recommend!

In December 1780, former Quaker turned general Nathanael Greene took command of the entire Southern Department. He reported only to George Washington himself. Leadership of the southern states to that point in the American Revolution had failed, as the British held all major southern cities, including the important port city of Charleston. Greene faced the British in several key battles in South Carolina in 1781 and ultimately was able to rid the state of the British and free Charleston, but not until 1782, long after the victory at Yorktown. Join author and historian Leigh Moring as she tells the forgotten story of General Nathanael Greene and the liberation of the Lowcountry at the end of the American Revolution.

"Greene, sometimes referred to by the sobriquet "The Fighting Quaker," is considered one of the true heroes of the American Revolution. He led the Southern Department during the Battle of Eutaw Springs, and the Patriot recapture of Charleston. Moring's book focuses on Greene's service to the Palmetto State." --Island Connection News "About the Author Leigh Moring is the education coordinator for Historic Charleston Foundation, where she manages K-12 educational programming in historic house museums.
