Kathryn Lee Fletcher : Warner Hot Springs (Images of America) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Warner Hot Springs (Images of America):

Also known as Kupa, Jojopin, and Aqua Caliente, Warner Hot Springs has been a "little piece of heaven" no matter what it has been called. Located in northeast San Diego County in the historic 47,000-acre Valle de San Jose, Warner Hot Springs is surrounded by the vast lands of the Cleveland National Forest, Los Coyotes Indian Reservation, Palomar Mountain, Bureau of Land Management, and Vista Irrigation Water District. Blessed with a four-season climate at an elevation of about 3,200 feet, it sits at the base of 6,500-foot Hot Springs Mountain, the tallest in San Diego County. Home of Native Americans, Spaniards, and white settlers, cowboys, and ranchers, Warner Hot Springs has played host to passing immigrants, Butterfield Stage passengers, vacationers, and movie stars. The world-famous hot springs have drawn people since the beginning of time. An early brochure states, "It's where you will have some of the best days of your life," and many would agree.

"Kathryn Lee Fletcher's new book, 'Warner Hot Springs' (Arcadia Publishing), was written in collaboration with the Warner Springs Historical Society. Filled with vintage photographs, the book provides a fascinating look at Warner Springs' past. Its rich and diverse history includes indigenous peoples, Spanish land grants, cowboys and ranchers, emigrant settlers, and Butterfield Stage passengers." Save Our Heritage News
About the Author
Author Kathryn Lee Fletcher, a landscape designer and president of the Warner Springs Historical Society, has drawn from the society's extensive photograph collection, the collection of the San Diego Historical Society, and personal photographs from residents and visitors to Warner Hot Springs to create a nostalgic look at this very special and historic place.
