From Syracuse University Press : We Are Iraqis: Aesthetics and Politics in a Time of War (Contemporary Issues in the Middle East) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised We Are Iraqis: Aesthetics and Politics in a Time of War (Contemporary Issues in the Middle East):

For the first time ever, an anthology in English puts together creative non-fiction, academic writing, poetry and visual arts by Iraqi contributors demonstrating how Iraqis have experienced, dealt with, and resisted the ongoing violence and destruction in creative and nonviolent ways.

Creativity is a form of resistance. This is the exhilarating message running through We Are Iraqis. Here is a rare chance for us all to see war's effects in looted museums, pain-filled poetry, exiled studios, where, against the odds, Iraqi artists refuse to be silenced or pushed into the shadows. --Cynthia Enloe, author of Nimo's War, *Emma's War: Making Feminist Sense of the Iraq War*A very important contribution to the fields of peace, resistance, and war. The book highlights the voices of Iraqi cultural producers and actors, providing them with a space to speak on their own behalf --Zeina Zaatari, Senior Program Officer, The Global Fund for WomenAbout the AuthorNadje Al-Ali is professor of gender studies at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. Deborah Al-Najjar is Ph.D. candidate in the Department of American Studies and Ethnicity at the University of Southern California.
